

How does your life compare to the life of the western pioneers?

People decided to move to America with the hope that they can do better their lives, or at least the most of the people traveled here because of this reason. Somebody came to here, because the life is feere in the United States, but freedom is also one of the qualities of the life. I suppose the final goal, or the basic goal is always the same: to make the life better. It was the same for the people who come here now and the same for the people who went out to the West.

The people who went to the West, traveled with horses or walking. If it was not very important, the people did not journey. Now people fly. It is not just because of the developing of flying, it is necessary in the speeded up life.

The other outstanding matter is the energy, and one of the types of it, the electricity, what are indispensable in our life. People in the West had to live without these things. They had to use their own hands, or their horses, cows or the power of the nature in the windmills and the watermills.

The togetherness in the family was more important than nowadays. More people lived together in that time, not only the parents and the children. People were sincere to each other (usually). From these sentences it seems that it was an ideal society, but unfortunately a lot of people were ruthless to the Native Americans. At least in this regard people changed positively.
